HERE have been from earliest times two trends in the art of dancing, one to develop it as a but of this anon. The idea that dancing is a thing to be watched, the other as an art for persal use. With varying power these ideas have rund mankind, while of their influence the two kinds of incide have evolved separately, until dien the personal art of a chassic or dreek solo and the personal art of police and with gusto fell to spinning around by couples in waitz and police and charging at each other in parlor one step than between a polka and charging at each other in NFW YORK'S every one gone mad—they are dancing!"

We find this Oriental idea in the hieroglyphics of ancient Dgypt. Practically throughout the Mohammedan world dancing is admired, looked at, and the dancer despised. In China no one dances at all. In ancient Greece the Oriental idea crept over the land, restricting to mere theatrical entertainment the beautiful Greek dancing—this which had been one of the greatest of forces for happiness, health and morality, creatively expressed in the personal lives of all the free men and women of Greece. The Romans early succumbed to the Greek Oriental idea, so that Cicero said "Nemo sanis saltat nisi ebrius"; no one of sound mind dances timess he's drunk. Lastly, in America to-day there are millions who stormlly applaud the stage dancers, good and bad, but who would no more think of dancing themselves than they would of jurging or playing the trombane. How different from this is the Occi-dental idea, which from earliest sav-agery calls for every able bodied person ngery calls for every able bodied person and dancing increases the proportion of such) to join in and dance? All barbarians, including our ancestors, held this ideal, but it was none too strong among the Anglo-Saxons, and the wandering gleeman soon became the chief dancer. From the thirteenth century to the eighteenth, however (except while suffering Puritanism), our ancestral land was in truth "Merrie England," with jigs and "hyswis", hon eggs galliands and was in truth "Merrie England," with jigs and "brawis," hop eggs, galliards and what not as the staple amusements of the common people and the best feature of recreational life. In the higher classes, especially after the Renaissance, the measure, coranto, is volts, pavane and many another "brent new frae France" refined the manners and made mind and body healthy. But with the Renaissance there reappeared the Oriental idea, the professional dancer, and evolved, growing in perfection and detachment from amateur dancing to producing the Pavlows, the clog dancer, the comic stepper and them all of tonic stepper and them all of to-

Should there not then be a goiden mean between the Occidental and Oriental ideas, an art that should avoid both the untrainedness and uncaringness of purely personal and amateur dancing, and the artificiality, commercialism and again irresponsibility of the stage dancer? Is there not a third kind of dancing and that has for its aims art for the spectator and benefits moral, mental and physical for the performer?

lowa, a Duncan without the Oriental system; and we could ill afford to be without the inspiration of their art, their discussing the Russian and interpretive in it and the high pleasure they give to millions.

Nor, on the other hand, is the Occidental idea all good. A certain number of speciators serve to inspire the dancers to do their best artistically, particularly if that best is good enough to attract special attention and applause. Spectators, too, particularly if mature and numberous, have an excellent effect as chaperons.

Should there not then be a golden mean to all the arts. It refines all the motions and gestures of one's life, inclining to decorum, nobility, grace and proportion in all things. It is everything to self-expression. It develops the mind, feeding, clarifying and refreshing it, through the dramatic education of expressing the diverse national characters and the interpretively danced emotions and stories, and through the intense but joyous labor of thinking so fast, six things in a second while practising, like a great diplomat discussing a delicate issue. (The climax of mental intensity and happiness is in the solo performance. Well did Scott write:

We all feel that.

Yet dancing is a peaceful joy and incitines the mind away from war. There is fighting in the psychic base of the ball game and the gymnasium, as of the military drill, but dancing leads only toward the higher life of love, art and urbanity, while yet fortifying the bodily health better perhaps than any of them.

which might be—nay, which must and will be—when to sweet music all people who have not hearts of stone shall dance should find time is coming, for, look, dancing is returning to the religious and by the architect, John F. Jackson. The sier, social centre and school, the settlements, young people's Christian associations and the churches are rapidly regaining possession of this potentially most dangerous or most salutary of public recreations. And the other sound place for dancing, the home, has just received the phonograph and planola, which at least provide fair music for home dancing, and for the first time in history music for home practice of elaborate dances. Now the Church, State and home are powers who value art as well as morals, and who with their control of education and supervision of recrection can easily foster the arts among or the architects grawing or the chapel, various college publications, two newspapers and a New York, New Haven and Hartford time table. The ceremony of laying the corneratone was then performed by President Cole.

The chapel consists of an auditorium with a tower in front and chancel at the back. SCHOOLMASTERS ASSOCIATION.

Seventy men dined and otherwise participated Friday evening in the first monthly meeting of the year of the Schoolmasters Association of New York and Vicinity, held at the Columbia University Club. Prof. Roswell McCrea. formerly dean of the Wharton School of Comperce of the University of Pannsylvania and now associated with the new school of business at Columbia, delivered an interesting address on "Prodelivered and "Prodeli delivered an interesting address on "Pro-fessional Training for Business," which was followed by discussion.

rcise the invaluable elements of joy and interest and its glorious art.

Then finally, on the spiritual side, the better dancing brings to its user that inner harmony of truth and beauty perceived. As through any art, but in proportion as the mind is absorbed and stimulated, there comes that clarifying of the mind and all the universe as seen by it, that washing clean and setting in order of the emotions. The drama and dancing do this best, and dancing the better, if you are not the spectator but the artist.

So for the lover good dancing can be the most perfect spiritualization of his emotion. But here it would be best that men and women should dance together, and we see the tragic fact that while many women know the better dancing, almost no men do. The beautiful passoral duet of Russian dancers or rictous sroup Chardash leave the sorrowing thought that such love making was once but not in our lives.

And so we fall to drawning of an age.

A boy is automatically put on probation who has conditions in more than eight hours' work per week. This probation can be removed only at regular scholarship ratings. For the past few years the requirements have been that no student could participate in school activities who had conditions in any subject, so that the new rules are any subject, so that the new rules are

WESLEYAN UNIVERSITY.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Oct. 28 .- On ac count of the late opening of Amherst and Williams, Wesleyan University has agreed to give up the plan to hold the fall triangular debate in Springfield. Mass. on November 3. The question: "Resolved. That the city of Springfield should adont the city manager has of should adopt the city manager plan of municipal government in preference to the modifie. federal plan," would have proved of interest to Springfield, for it will be voted on there at election. The plan now is to hold the debate later in the fall at the respective colleges with a different question.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.

Westminster School, Simsbury, Conn. has been fortunate in securing C. W. Ashby, formerly assistant in the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale, to cover the courses offered in modern languages at Simsbury this year. To the advantage of extensive experience abroad which has given him an unusual fluency in conversation and accuracy of secent Mr. Ashby, adds a personal knowledge of exactly what the colleges domand in their entrance requirements.

dency toward selecting studies of immediate practical value many students at the Barnard School for Boys at Fieldstom, New York city, have elected Spanish as one of the languages to be offered for college entrance. Additional classes have been organised in the Spanish department to encourage this tendency among the boys to learn the language that would bring us in closer touch with the countries of Central and South America.

Reports are made in chapel from time to time of the progress of recent Bar-rardians in their college courses. Dur-ling the past week the committee having this matter in charge reported that Edward Stevenson Pinney, Barnard 1913, was one of the nine in the class of 1917 at Yale who had received election to Phi Beta Kappa at the end of the junior year. Robert Roy O'Loughlin, also Bar-nard 1918, has been elected captain of the varsity erew at Columbia.

HAVERFORD COLLEGE.

At a meeting of the corporation of Haverford College, Haverford, Pa., Asa S. Wing, treasurer of the board of Haverford College since 1884, was Haverford College since 1884, was elected president of the corporation to succeed the late T. Wistar Brown.

The opening meeting of the Y. M. C. A was held last week in Founders Hall. Prof. Rufus M. Jones addressed the Y. M. C. A., emphasising the equality of all classes in college and the necessity of unity in making the Y. M. C. A. work count. Robert B. Miller, '17, president of the association, gave an account of the Eglesmers Conference and outlined the work for the winter. He announced that work for the winter. He announced that Dr. H. H.
